AN APPRECIATION

One of his former pupils told me that during his years as principal of Blue Hill Academy he was always called Preceptor—never Professor, nor the modern familiar Prof.—Just Preceptor. What a fitting title for one who was not only a dearly loved teacher, but also an example of upright living.

A few years ago, one of Judge Herriek's conferees in conversation with my husband said: "Judge Herriek is one of the ablest lawyers in Maine. Lacking, perhaps, that crackling eloquence that moves juries to laughter or to tears, his profound knowledge of the law is so well recognized that his rulings on contested legal points are sought by attorneys all over New England. If he would work as successfully for himself as he does for others he would win fame and a fortune." But fame mattered little to Judge Herriek. The fact he had been able to help another satisfied him.

Like all scholarly types of men, Judge Herriek found his greatest joy in the simple values of life. His home and his family, his books and his garden; a day's fishing, often with some young companion; a stroll through the pine woods; a brilliant sunset; a shining star—these were his compensations. An evening's conversation with a congenial friend was a never failing source of pleasure and those privileged to share these discussions could only marvel at the wide range of his interests.

Sham and hypocrisy were anathema to him. He went his way kindly, serenely, honorably.

And thus he came to the evening of his life's Christian Gentleman. What higher title could be bestowed upon any man.

The lovely simplicity which Mr. Herriek cherished in life marked the last service his friends were able to render him. Surely no eulogy could have added to the impressive dignity of that service. A scripture reading by his pastor was followed by a beautiful and heartfelt tribute by his friend, Mr. Hanson, who voiced as only he can those qualities of heart and mind which endeared Mr. Herriek to all.

Florence Carter Tibbets.

By request of many, President Hyde's poem read at Judge Herriek's funeral service and Mr. Hanson's prefacing words are given here.

There are times in life, when we stand so near the veil that separates the mortal from the immortal, that adequate expression of our inmost feelings becomes extremely difficult. If not wholly impossible. Knowing, however, as we do, that our friend who sleeps today would wish no pronouncement of eulogy, we refrain even from voicing those words that are less than eulogy, although we know full well, that back of this deed and blessing, personality was the best guarantee of character, of unwavering honesty, of unflinching fidelity, of love and conviction and abiding faith.

Judge Herriek, for it is by the familiar title of Judge that we shall which always to speak of him, possessed in an unusual degree the spirit of love and loyalty—love for his honor and family, love for his downer loyalty to his friends, and loyalty—any cause that he espoused.

This spirit of loyalty was especially pronounced in its relation to the college which he loved and honored, and which, in turn, loved and honored him. William DeWitt Hyde was his ideal college President, as well as his ideal man. He admitted the strong, vivid English employed by President Hyde in all his writings and public addresses—writings that now have become classics. A little poem, or hymn, written by President Hyde, and published in the Outlook years ago, was Judge Herriek's favorite. He loved the simple, forceful, Anglo-Saxon words, and, above all, I believe he loved the unadornedness of simple truth that runs through every line. We may well believe that this beautiful hymn embodied the code and creed by which Judge Herriek was guided and directed in shaping his life and character.

It is this little poem that I am asked to read today.

"Creation's Lord, we give Thee thanks That this The world is so complete That battle calls our marshalled ranks. That work awaits our hands and feet.

That thou hast not yet given I mean, That we are in the machine of life As friends who share the same plan. As sons who know the Father's will.

Beyond the present and the past, Beyond the bitter, cruel, harsh, bright, We see the beckoning stars above The blessed kingdom of the Right.

What thought the kingdom long did wait And still with haughty, lone, no hope? It gives us that for which to pray A field for toil and faith and hope.

Since what we choose to what we And what we love we yet shall The goal may ever shine afar The will to win it makes us free.
